Alteronce Gumby: On Earth as It Is in Heaven
Nooshin Rostami: un-there
125 Maiden Lane New York, NY 10038

Art-in-Buildings is pleased to announce two new exhibitions opening in the atrium and lobby of 125 Maiden Lane, Alteronce Gumby, On Earth as It Is in Heaven and Nooshin Rostami, un-there.

In an ongoing exploration of when color takes form, Alteronce Gumby's installation On Earth as It Is in Heaven brings celestial wonder to the atrium of 125 Maiden Lane. Drawing inspiration from Sir Isaac Newton's Opticks, in which he discovered the visible spectra of color by passing sunlight through prisms, Gumby expands to consider the source of light itself – the cosmos.

As energy from the sun and the stars reach the earth it becomes color and with it, materializes. For Gumby, this phenomenon is represented in a series of colorful prisms floating across the space, born out of a translucent resin monolith that stands six feet tall, anchoring the room. Set against a reflective backdrop, the installation allows light to refract off the visually rich surfaces Gumby crafts and creates a "living" painting. The composition alludes to Hubble Space Telescope images called the 'Pillars of Creation,' which depict rods of cosmic dust where stars are born, much like the suspended pieces of quartz, lapis, and labradorite gemstones within the monolith.

On Earth as It Is in Heaven builds on a metaphysical connection between the celestial and terrestrial through color, light, and energy. Gumby's visually transcendent installation is born out of the cosmos and the artists own desire to live within his ethereal paintings, offering audiences a new perspective towards color and light.

In the lobby of 125 Maiden Lane, Nooshin Rostami's un-there presents twin sculptures that demonstrate the poetics of light in a masterful exploration of texture and reflection. Spawned from two identical rectangular steel plates, each sculpture rests on a mirrored base alongside its reversed image. Within this doubling, a new geometry is born. "The metaphorical instant of an object merging with its reflection is an invitation to turn one's gaze internally." Rostami explains, "a window of perception is unlocked to the viewer, where the solid structure shapes a unified whole with its inner image. A new entirety is born when one catches sight of what lies under."

As the structures reflect into the metallic oblivion, one draws a triangle and the other, a perfect circle. The contrast of angular corners and smooth curvature rhyme with one another; establishing an electric atmosphere of tension from their divergent formal qualities. One piece is bent at a sharp angle and the other is arched to a simple even curve. Among these tensions include the materiality and the ephemera of light, and the potential for light to activate the space surrounding the sculpture. Contemplating notions of perception, exile, and "whole-ness," Rostami's sculptures prompt viewers to consider the potentiality of shifted perspectives and the wonder of drawing with light.
